UU Values

As Unitarian Universalists, we draw from our heritages of freedom, reason, hope, and courage, building six values with Love at the center. Inseparable from one another, these shared values are:

- Interdependence: We honor the interdependent web of all existence.
- Pluralism: We celebrate that we are all sacred beings, diverse in culture, experience, and theology.
- Justice: We work to be diverse multicultural Beloved Communities where all thrive.
- Transformation: We adapt to the changing world.
- Generosity: We cultivate a spirit of gratitude and hope.
- Equity: We declare that every person is inherently worthy and has the right to flourish with dignity, love, and compassion.

A Brief History of the Pre-20th Century Family

excerpted from “The Evolution of American Family Structure,” by Concordia University

When America was founded, a family was defined as a husband, wife, biological children and extended family. In the 19th and early 20th centuries people often married to gain property rights or to move social class. All of that changed in the 1800s, with the ideas of love and romance becoming the main reason to wed. Divorce was rare; the process of getting a divorce was very expensive, and a judge would never allow it, unless it was the last resort. Because this structure was so dominant, it played a crucial role in the creation and replication of cultural roles for men and women. Wives had no legal identity under a condition called coverture. Legally, upon marriage, the husband and wife were treated as one entity. In essence, the wife’s separate legal existence disappeared as far as property rights and certain other rights were concerned. Husbands, in contrast, were managers and providers in the family. They controlled finances and had ultimate authority in the eyes of both society and the law. It was generally against the law to live together or have children outside of marriage. However, by the 19th century, coverture was less of an issue and these rigid legal boundaries were relaxed, with common-law marriage widely recognized as an acceptable union.
